WE ARE RESTLESS

Annual Report 2022
We believe young people’s collective power can lead us all through the world’s greatest challenges. That’s why we train, mentor, support and connect thousands of young people all over the planet to work together to solve some of the biggest challenges of today.
Welcome to this year’s annual report – celebrating a year of impact and transformation here at Restless Development.

In this publication, you will read about the many ways in which we have impacted the lives of over half a million young people across the world. Our work is having an effect both in the community and on the world stage, with our girls education work informing the UN Transforming Education agenda and our climate change research being heard at COP26.

Having a long history of volunteering and working at Restless Development, we are so proud to be part of this impact and are excited to lead the organisation through a transformative period.

In the past year, we have moved out of survival mode after the pandemic and begun the important work of shifting power: That means moving money, resources and decision-making to young leaders and local communities. Our Power Shifting Checklist and appointment of a Power Shifting Director are both helping us make this happen.

Our new strategy, co-created with a global team of young leaders, has also seen us continue to grow the Youth Collective, increase transparency and improve collaboration. Nearly all our communications, finance, partnerships, learning and operations staff are now outside of the UK.

As we continue on this journey, we are clear on one thing – never has the world needed the collective power of young leaders more. We will do everything to enable them to thrive.
Sometimes the future seems uncertain
Daunting, scary

Sometimes the future is exciting
Fun, filled with adventure

Most times, it’s all of the above

Our future IS restless.
It has the face of youth
Our future is all the things,
Queer, feminist, decolonial, deconstructed...
Our future is so complex.

Our future is also now.
It’s happening while we work,
Our future is being shaped by our hands,
And by those who we serve

Our future
Is not just ours
We share those slowly paved roads
With so many more smiling faces

Our future
Is, more than anything
Filled with hope.

FOREWORD
A message from Jimena Cascante Matamoros

Being a part of Restless Development is an adventure. It’s constantly changing, shaping itself as we go, while we find the hints that lead us through the treasure hunt, only the treasure is a better world, and to get there, we need to make new plans and new friends along the way.

Every year the adventure evolves, like life itself, while we learn new things about ourselves, while we embrace new identities, while we find our place in this world.

The year brings the challenge of growing and engaging the Youth Collective, which has a force of itself. We’ll also continue participating in global events and partnering with allies to make the voices of so many young people be heard on how to shape their futures.

Our adventure is also about how we work together as an agency, how we find our way (and maybe lose it a little, as well), in order to be stronger, more resilient, and overall, just keep being restless.

Restless Development is a non-profit global agency that supports the collective power of young leaders to create a better world.

Our latest Global Strategy is our roadmap to 2030 and guides our work not only across our Hubs in India, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe – but the thousands of youth organisations we work with all over the world.

This is what it is all about.

Why do we exist? To strengthen Youth Power: the collective power of young leaders to create a better world.

How do we work? We take a power shifting approach. We aim to be feminist, inclusive, and anti-racist in all that we do. We are guided by our Power Shifting Checklist.

What do we do? Our approach is made up of tried and tested methodologies including youth-led research, youth power hacks, community-led mobilisation, youth-led accountability, advocacy and leadership programmes. All our work is context specific designed by and for young people.

What’s our focus? Our work is defined by young people. We have four key impact areas, creating change at all levels – from local communities to national, regional and global spaces.

What does it all add up to? The Youth Collective – a global, inclusive network for all young leaders, youth organisations and networks to work in solidarity. They can learn from each other, access funding, opportunities, and strengthen the work that all young leaders do.
Restless Development prides itself on making an impact.

We focus our efforts on four key areas that are both young people’s priorities and essential to creating a better world for all:

• Climate Justice
• Education & Livelihoods
• Gender and Sexual Rights
• Voice & Democracy

Read on to find out how we’ve been making an impact in more detail.
OUR IMPACT

Climate Justice

When we asked young people we work with what mattered the most to them, they told us their number one issue is: Climate Change. That’s why we have been rapidly scaling up our work on Climate Justice all over the world.

In Bangalore, India, we launched the Youth Climate Action Lab. Young Climate Advocates are holding decision makers to account, increasing youth participation and building a Knowledge Hub to empower young people in the climate change space. Their work is building towards a youth-led charter of demands to be published by March 2024.

In Nepal, the Nepali Yuwa for Climate Action and Green Growth is empowering 40 young people to contribute to the post-COVID recovery and their communities. Through a range of initiatives covering entrepreneurship, mentoring and digital advocacy, young people are leading the way with innovative ideas for change and are campaigning on a variety of policy changes to promote environmental protection.

In response to young people’s demands, Restless Development is looking to accelerate its work on climate justice next year – amplifying youth voices and facilitating grassroots change.

In Uganda, the ‘Living in the Climate Crisis: Young People in Uganda’ report led to the launch of the #TakingClimateToSchool campaign. The Uganda hub, in collaboration with University of Cambridge and Makerere University, is seeking to increase awareness of climate change after the report recommended a boost to climate change education at the primary school level.

At COP26, the #MissingMajority campaign brought the voices of traditionally excluded young people directly to the leaders negotiating at the conference. Youth Power Climate Reps showcased the urgent need for youth involvement in climate decision-making spaces, with their efforts getting media hits on the likes of CNN and BBC.

SPOTLIGHT:
The Zimbabwean Climate Debate

Climate Change is happening – but who is to blame? That’s one of the central community conversations uncovered by young changemakers in Zimbabwe. The youth-led research project conducted across two districts in Zimbabwe, Harare and Chimanimani, revealed a mixed picture of understanding.

While 92% of participants believed that climate change is real, their understanding of its causes are varied and included many prevalent misconceptions. For instance, climate change was sometimes viewed as a divine punishment or a response to the neglect of indigenous spiritual traditions and customs. The findings highlight the need for more education on climate change and a deliberate effort from community leaders to dispel climate change myths and misconceptions.

Young people are keen to play their part in climate change public education and advocacy but the researchers identified a number of barriers to them doing so. Lack of access to resources and decision-making spaces, young researchers called for youth-inclusive spaces, such as youth centres, where young people can get the information and training they need and organise in leadership roles.

Young people also identified additional barriers to those with disabilities, so two young people with disabilities were recruited as researchers and support was provided to ensure they could participate fully in the project.

During the project, young leaders piloted advocacy initiatives that showcased the considerable potential for young people’s climate leadership in their communities. They carried out community dialogues, debates and home visits – activities that were praised by the Departmental Evaluation for being sustainable, cost-effective and innovative.

In all, the Young Changemakers of Climate Change project demonstrates the potential of young people’s expertise and innovative capacity. When coupled with meaningful support, young people can make a real difference to climate change conversations in their communities.

Now the call is on community leaders, educational institutions, and civil society actors to facilitate and empower young people’s leadership in climate change advocacy.
Young people receiving the education and skills they need to succeed in work is pivotal to our future. So our Education & Livelihoods work continues to be a key part of what we do, reaching thousands of young people every year.

In Sierra Leone, we delivered financial literacy training to well over a thousand women living in informal settlements. It made a strong impact with 74 saving groups subsequently created across dozens of settlements. Now women have improved access to loans, helping them to set up businesses and better withstand income shocks.

In Tanzania, as part of a COVID-19 response partnership, 458 female and 426 male non-graduates and 117 female and 118 male graduates were trained in employability and entrepreneurial skills. This resulted in new business generation – such as establishing poultry farms and a sweet potato plantation. The Youth Entrepreneurship Groups raised more than 5.4 Million TZS through savings and loan groups, wages, and selling products from their businesses.

In Zambia, thousands of young girls were supported through the Ubunonshi Youth Empowerment project to improve their education performance and earning potential. The programme made girls feel more confident about pursuing careers they were passionate about, with savings clubs further supporting entrepreneurial efforts like chicken rearing and book selling. The Career Clubs established in communities also helped double the number of girls remaining in education and improve academic performance.

Restless Development is looking to build on its success in this past year, particularly with young girls and women, as young people seek to bounce back from the effects of the pandemic. We have brought young leaders into the global efforts to transform education – first in the run up to RewirEd in Dubai and following that the UN Transforming Education Summit.
How does global education need to change to work for young people in an uncertain future? That was one of the big questions tackled by young researchers in the By Us, For Us report.

In the biggest youth-led study on global education since the pandemic, twelve young researchers from twelve different countries examined data from 70 different countries across the world.

Their research included a survey of over 3,000 young people, as well as interviews and focus groups to gain a deeper understanding of young people’s perspectives.

Their central finding is that the global education system is failing to prepare young people for the world of work. Those surveyed felt that the education they receive is poorly aligned with the work opportunities available and that schools are stuck on outdated teaching styles, like memorising textbooks, instead of equipping them with the skills they need to succeed. It was also revealed that financial security is not the only thing young people are looking for in work, with as many as 28% saying that their main goal is to learn and grow while one in four wanted the autonomy of running their own business.

When it comes to shaping education policy, young people feel at best ignored and patronised and at worst silenced and shut down. That finding moved young people to demand radical change through a new campaign called #MakeEducationWork.

After reaching millions of young people all over the world with their digital and grassroots campaigning, their campaigning culminated in taking their Curriculum For Change to world leaders at the ReWired global summit on education in Dubai.

With over a billion young people expected to seek work in the next decade, but just 40% expected to find it, this is an urgent problem that needs fixing. That’s why Restless Development has built on the foundations laid by By Us, For Us by launching a new education reform project in Sierra Leone and continues to work with young people for a better system.
OUR IMPACT

Gender and Sexual Rights

Young people have the right to be safe, respected and have access to the healthcare they need. That’s why our work on gender equality and sexual rights is fundamental. It has long been a big part of what we do and this year it has been even bigger.

In Sierra Leone, hundreds of young leaders have been taking action in their communities to help influence and change the behaviour of their peers. Their work has reached almost 200,000 young people and led to attitudinal improvements in family planning and ending child marriage.

In Uganda, young campaigners have won the support of 25 district and sub-district officials to support victims of sexual and gender-based violence. Their capacity building and advocacy work means victims will have improved access to services and are more likely to secure justice when reporting to authorities.

In Zambia, the Settling the Score project saw thousands of changemakers raise awareness of healthy relationships through football, traditionally a male-only sport. The activities reached over 10,000 community members and resulted in a big take up of contraceptives and HIV testing at local clinics.

In Zimbabwe, the GenEndIt Youth Ambassadors are having influence on a global scale. They contributed to the international ‘No Syringes’ strategy that supports young people to stay safe from contracting HIV and other Sexually Transmitted Infections.

In Tanzania, hundreds of young girls became part of a powerful platform for change as over 20 youth groups were established, strengthened and registered as formal enterprises with local authorities. The project particularly focused on empowering young teenage girls that were out of school and also provided access to sexual health services, relating to HIV/AIDS.

286,777 people reached through our sexual rights work – almost trebling last year’s number

80% of young people improved menstrual hygiene knowledge on Thrive project in Zimbabwe

As an organisation that prides itself on its feminist leadership, tackling gender inequality will always remain central to our work. In the coming year, we will continue to fight discrimination and ensure young people can claim full rights over their bodies.
Who should lead the effort to secure sexual and reproductive health and rights across the world? The We Lead programme has the simple answer: the young women most affected.

The innovative programme is specifically aimed at strengthening the influence of the most marginalised young women and girls across Africa, the Middle East and Central America.

Often discriminated against for having certain characteristics or living with stigmatised conditions, like HIV, the We Lead programme seeks to shift power to these young people so they can effectively advocate for their rights.

The programme has been extremely effective at increasing youth leadership, with 80% demonstrating better knowledge of leadership skills and 70% showing improvements in communication skills.

Young women have also developed a Meaningful Youth Engagement scorecard to hold the consortium to account on how they are engaging with rights holders.

The programme is already having an impact in communities across the world. Young women in Honduras have been collecting evidence on violations related to sexual and reproductive health. While in Guatemala, they used the accountability model they learnt to develop their advocacy plans.

Meanwhile, on the global stage, we supported young women to attend and influence the International AIDS Conference in Canada for better access to HIV treatment—with further media, podcast and interviews as a result. We Lead is continuing to power the movement. It helped grow the Youth Collective to over 3,900 members and reached 171 organisations directly through its Leadership Labs initiative.
OUR IMPACT

Voice & Democracy

Young people have a right to be heard and to influence the decisions that impact their lives. Our work in this area enables young people to advocate for their needs, join decision-making spaces and hold their leaders to account from the local to global stage.

- In Tanzania, almost a hundred young researchers were trained up in data-driven accountability skills. The Kijana Wajibika (Youth be Responsible) project worked with civil society organisations to collect diversity and inclusion data, so they could hold their Government to account on its commitment to the Global Goals. The project was recognised for its high-participation rate and sustainability, with many organisations continuing the work years later.

- In Nepal, the Youth Sounding Board established a space for young people to meaningfully participate in governance processes. The consultative space enabled board members to influence the European Union’s development work in Nepal through participatory discussions in a way that was relevant to them.

- In Uganda, young people were equipped with the skills required to monitor government budgets. The anti-corruption project gathered evidence from thousands of community members to assess whether the public spending matched politicians’ commitments. The young advocates managed to get a hygiene project back on track after it ran behind schedule.

- In Zambia, over 200 young people were trained in engagement techniques to help them in decision-making spaces. Their work gathered insights on how the local constituency development fund was being used and led to the participation of young people in several council meetings.

- Globally, the Democracy Moves network brings together young democracy campaigners from around the world. With young people distrustful of formal politics, this initiative is breaking down barriers and improving youth engagement with elected officials and government.

Our work has contributed to a growing sense that young people’s priorities need to be listened to, from local leaders in the community to major decision-makers at international conferences like COP26 and AIDS2022. Young people will continue to raise their voices.

How can we do development differently and improve outcomes for local communities? By putting young people in the driving seat.

The Development Alternative was a groundbreaking consortium that shifted power to young people by equipping them with the skills to monitor and assess the delivery of projects in their communities.

One of the key legacies of the Development Alternative has been the emphasis on learning. This saw the creation of various resources to help ensure the impact of the work could continue long after the communities were engaged with. This included animated videos, briefing reports, case studies and other practical guidance documents.

One of the most striking learning legacy outcomes was the Cookbook for Youth-Led Accountability. The innovative document is based around six core ingredients for quality, youth-led accountability work:

1. Youth Leadership
2. Transparency and access to information
3. Mechanisms to listen and gather feedback
4. Building trust and collaboration with development actors
5. Supporting development actors to respond to feedback
6. Youth leadership Community awareness and engagement

Each ingredient has a dedicated chapter, with the Cookbook finishing with the Model for Change recipe and some cooking tips. It has become an essential best practice guide for any youth-led organisation planning to hold development actors to account in their community.

OUR IMPACT

Youth-Led Research

Young people are experts. That’s the fundamental claim of our approach to youth-led research, where we partner with young people to capture key insights on what matters the most to them. It’s their knowledge, they produce it – they own it.

In India, over a hundred young people were interviewed about their experiences of the COVID-19 pandemic. Using the ethical research platform, Fatima, respondents answered questions about how they were impacted by and responded to the crisis. The youth-led findings demonstrated that women and girls’ access to education and jobs were disproportionately affected but that overall young people served as leaders in their communities during this time of need.

In Indonesia and Nepal, a hundred young people wrote diaries for four months as part of a pandemic-safe, qualitative research project, “Youth in a Time of Crisis”. The in-depth study provided an insight into the complex and nuanced experiences of vulnerable young people during the crisis, with the findings helping to inform policymakers about how better to support them based on their experiences.

In Uganda, young researchers looked at how civil society organisations adapted their sexual and reproductive health services during the pandemic. Examining the situation in countries across Central America, Sub-Saharan Africa and the Middle East, researchers recommended to stakeholders ways to ensure quality information and services could remain accessible during the crisis.

In Zimbabwe, 20 young researchers were trained and supported to identify their community’s understanding of climate change. The findings uncovered many myths and misconceptions to be addressed by the community. The evaluation demonstrated that the training and support was effective at translating into impactful, evidence-based advocacy work. (See more in Climate Justice Spotlight).

A 70-country study led by 12 young researchers interviewing over 3,200 people looked at the state of the global education system. By Us, For Us: Rewiring Education for a New Generation, revealed an outdated education system that was failing to prepare young people for the world of work. It provided a platform to launch a new campaign, Make Education Work, which reached over 12 million young people globally. (See more in Education & Livelihoods Spotlight).

When it comes to research about young people, nobody does it better than the young people themselves. That’s why Restless Development will continue to train and support young people to produce quality, youth-led research that brings a new perspective to policymakers all over the world.
How are youth organisations getting on around the world? It’s a question that Restless Development asks itself every year, but the pandemic has meant this year’s answer is particularly concerning.

The State of Youth Civil Society is a youth-led annual report that looks at how formal and informal youth organisations, groups and movements have experienced the past year and what they face in the near future.

This year’s report, gathering insights from over 800 organisations spanning 87 countries, unavoidably focused on the impact of the pandemic. It found that while youth organisations have been a lifeline for many during the crisis, funding cuts and other restrictions have significantly held them back.

Almost all youth civil society organisations had to change their activities in some way because of the pandemic, with as many as three in four facing funding cuts that hurt their ability to create change. It was reported that these additional pressures only intensified increasing stresses, with organisations already grappling with the climate and jobs crises.

But youth civil society remained resilient. Despite the challenges, as many as 47% of organisations said they believe that youth civil society is stronger than ever before. It takes pride in its ability to be more innovative and take more risks than more traditional, top-down organisations – leading to greater creativity and community-led organising.

With this fresh and optimistic perspective, brought by young people themselves, the report shows the way towards a more hopeful future. One where a thriving, vibrant youth civil society can adapt and respond to all the global challenges they face.

“Young people have proven to have the competence, capacity and character to lead change – we need all hands on deck to protect youth civil society.”

“No one else knows more about youth issues and how to solve them than young people themselves. We are the experts”

MIALY, 24,
YOUTH RESEARCHER FROM MADAGASCAR
We are hopeful and visionary
We are creating new pathways beyond the status quo. We innovate and turn our vision of a better world into reality.

We are adaptable and resilient
We are not restricted by process and short-termism. We are resilient to challenges and crises and adapt in ways to best achieve our goals.

We are diverse and interconnected
We don’t work in sector silos. We recognise the connectedness of the issues we seek to address: including gender equality, climate change, health, livelihoods, education, disability rights and democracy.

We are leaders
Our leadership is not hierarchical. We are paving the way and call on others to change and support our transformative and alternative forms of leadership.

We are proudly young
We are global and diverse, not defined by an age bracket. We have different lived experiences, knowledge and are experts in our own realities.

We are skilled mobilisers
We are connected. We use tech to provide solidarity and support, overcoming barriers of time and distance, creating local and global movements with shared purpose. We are best when we work together.

We are youth power principles
These youth power principles have been compiled and defined by young leaders across the world. Youth power is not rigid, it works across different issues and sectors. Youth power is about celebrating our complexity, diversity and uniqueness. For us Youth Power is the following:

We are inclusive
We are all different and unique. We celebrate the power of our diversity. We also acknowledge intersectionality, our diverse experiences and privileges. We seek to create safe spaces for free participation.

We are change makers
We are effective in the long term and our actions impact the future. We mobilise and organise using transformative approaches that respect people and the planet.

We are truthful
We are authentic and honest with ourselves and each other. We are driven by passion and hold each other and decision makers to account.

We listen
What is your youth power principle?
Power-shifting

Restless Development recognises that systemic inequalities and historic injustices shape the world we live in. That’s why we designed our Power Shifting approach – to be purposeful in our efforts to enable young people to lead.

Many marginalised young people face barriers to participation due to age, gender, sexuality, disability, ethnicity, religion, sexual preference, geographic location or community. We work to ensure that those who face an injustice can fight against it and be heard.

In Sierra Leone, the Youth Fund shifted power to youth civil society by directly funding youth-led initiatives. One big success was the invention of solar-powered backpacks. Young people spotted the problem of children studying in the dark outside their homes after school, so they designed and distributed a new product to help - improving the education of low-income children with a practical innovation.

In Zambia, young people co-designed and developed the Chitetezo project to tackle Gender Based Violence (GBV) in a way that meets their needs. This power shift saw young people collect local data and develop an advocacy strategy that suited their own ideas. This led to them raising awareness among key community stakeholders about the issue through events, traditional media and social media campaigns.

To help guide us and the wider sector to take a Power Shifting approach we developed the Power Shifting Checklist. You can find it online here!

Money matters

Restless Development understands that funding is a justice issue. It cannot be viewed as separate from our vision & mission. That’s why a key part of our power-shifting mission is to redistribute money and resources from donors in the Global North to young leaders in the Global South. We are committed to:

- At least 50% of what we raise going directly to youth-led organisations
- Co-creating all our future programmes with young people
- Not competing with local youth organisations for grants
- We have a set of criteria we are assessing our partnerships against and plan to track which qualify as power shifting in this way.

Youth Collective

The Youth Collective is a global community for young people and youth-led organisations. It’s our way of ensuring youth civil society can thrive. Our unique network is transforming the way young people make change happen – shifting power from traditional, top-down civil society organisations to resource-sharing, grassroots, youth-led organisations.

The Youth Collective provides connection, training and funding through innovative initiatives like the Leadership Labs and Donor Dialogues. It is also a directory and a network of youth civil society organisations, able to be discovered by others and connect with each other.

After several years of consistent growth, we are now on a mission to accelerate the Youth Collective’s network – with a target of raising $15 million over the next three years to reach 100,000 youth-led organisations.

Ultimately, the Youth Collective is a vehicle for the issues that matter to young people. From gender equality to climate justice – young people are empowered to learn from each other and take action. In doing so, it reframes the perception of young people and shifts power directly to them.

RESTLESS DEVELOPMENT

Triathlons:
- 6,000 children (aged 7-13)
  - Swam 480 km
  - Cycled 6912 Km
  - Ran 4756 Km

And Raised £730,000!

Restless Development is extremely grateful to all of our supporters for helping us to raise vital funds for our work with young people across the world. In true Restless fashion, young people swam, ran, cycled, climbed and gave generously to raise over £2.6 million in the last year.

Moving mountains
17 young professionals took on a challenge of a lifetime and hiked Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania for youth power in February 2022. Not only did everyone make it to the summit at 5,895m, but the group also raised an incredible £163,485!

We are blown away by their fundraising efforts as they shared JustGiving pages with friends and family, secured company match funding, sold handmade bracelets, created a tennis tournament event, hosted a Camden Brewery evening with a special performance from Zak Abel and a big gala dinner which raised over £79k alone through silent and live auctions and raffle prizes!

A special thank you to Francesca Bowen for rallying this group together and smashing the fundraising targets.

Powering Up Girls Education
Restless Development ran our biggest-ever match fundraising appeal from March to June 2023. We raised an incredible £1,759,982.87, including £816,792.80 of match funding from the UK government.

The money raised will help more than 15,000 out-of-school girls in Sierra Leone and around the world to return to the classroom, get their education and build their careers.

A huge thank you to all our wonderful supporters who took part by donating, fundraising or sharing the Power Up appeal.

“I am so pleased that she was brave enough to put her hand up to take part, her challenges will continue with academics and sports but she has determination in spades and hopefully this will see her through.”

DEBBIE JONES, ISABELLA’S MOTHER

Rest Less, Tri More
Congratulations to the thousands of Triathletes who took part in the Schools Triathlon – the UK’s largest sport fundraising event for 7-13 year olds.

The event took place across seven schools in the UK in April and May and was kindly supported by our event sponsors, Flight Centre, Knight Frank, Oppidan Education and Limitless. Thanks also goes to the hundreds of generous volunteers and school pupils who kindly gave up their Sundays to cheer on our triathletes, and to our Restless Development champions; School Triathlon co-founders Jim Sewell and Tessa Murray, and Committee members for your endless support.

Lots of inspiring stories came out of the events including Isabella, 7, who was told by doctors she would never ride a bike or master swimming. She defied expectations by completing the triathlon with her team, ‘Guacamole Force’. Isabella inspired many with her determination and she raised £1,340 for charity.

Isabella learnt how to cycle in just 3 months after being diagnosed with Dyspraxia, Hypermobility and Sensory Disorder.
People

Restless Development is constantly innovating to ensure we are getting the most out of and doing right by the people that work for us. This year has been another transformational year with a change in the way we do leadership and with new, bottom-up initiatives to ensure staff feel heard and develop well in their careers.

THE BATFOX AWARD
The Batfox award is our way of recognising and honouring the best Hub Director of the year. Nominated by peers, the award was created for all Directors to vote for the Hub Director they think embodies the best of Restless.

In December 2021, Haika Mawalla was awarded Batfox, based on her great achievements as Director of the Tanzania hub. From the way she was always on the road to showcase the work of the Hub, to her efforts to build the team, all the way to her tireless efforts to fundraise, we all witnessed her passion and commitment to young people in Tanzania.

TRANSFORMING LEADERSHIP
Four years ago, we built an inclusive leadership team – a diverse team with young leaders and representation from the majority world. But we found we were still working predominantly in the same way.

This year we took deeper action and used a feminist leadership approach to become more self-aware about how we work, and how to go about transforming the agency to enable real change. As a result, we now have a much larger, flatter leadership group. We are less dominated by white, Western voices, and the balance of race and ethnicity has tipped the right way.

Everyone has a clear role and something they’re accountable for; young leaders have clear roles and remits – and they aren’t there just because they are a young person. We embrace the different knowledge that we bring into the space while recognising we are all at different stages of our leadership journey.

RESTLESS YOUTH
Established by three young leaders, Restless Youth – an internal employee resource group – was designed to bring younger staff members together to connect, share and learn. Restless Youth provides space for young colleagues across the organisation to combine ideas, share best practice and experiences, and uphold the principles of two-way dynamic accountability between the Global Leadership Group and staff teams.

RESTLESS LEADERS
Restless Development’s “Restless Leaders” initiative supports the leadership journeys of young people to accelerate their progress in their careers, ability to lead change and multiply leaders. The act of a young person becoming a leader is an act of redressing injustice, claiming power, and exercising agency; this is the core essence of Restless Development.

FINANCE AND OPERATIONS
CO-LEADERSHIP
In May 2022 we recruited another co-lead for all our finance and operations – shared by Sunil Mahawar, based in India, and Genevieve Seddon, based in the UK, these co-lead Directors will cover finance and compliance. Sunil and Genevieve are supported by a truly global finance team spanning Nepal, India, Uganda and the UK.

Policies

1. Keeping our people safe

Our safety & security and safeguarding system is designed to prevent harm by educating our people, ensuring that they can identify causes for concern, know how to report them, and enable us to investigate and take appropriate action.

This year, we updated our safeguarding policy, carrying out annual training for all staff to ensure safeguarding remains a collective responsibility. 12 staff were maintained as Lead Safeguarding Officers, and received updated training. We continue to learn and improve our safeguarding measures - adapting to the growing challenges of safeguarding young people in digital spaces.

Between October 2021 and September 2022, three non-critical incidents were reported to the Commission and Trustees, representing a decrease from last year in which five incidents were reported.

2. Wellbeing and Happiness

Staff and volunteer wellbeing is an ongoing priority and we update our wellbeing and happiness plan every quarter following feedback from staff surveys.

We also supported performance managers to discuss wellbeing and work-life balance with their teams, and encouraged everyone to adopt a personal wellbeing goal. In addition we ensure regular wellbeing and mindfulness activities are incorporated into our quarterly staff workshops.

We have a track record of staff feeling valued and happy working at Restless Development. Our 2021/22 Agency survey told us that: 95% of our staff felt valued and that their contributions were listened to. 93% of staff felt empowered and supported to succeed in their role.

3. Dynamic Accountability

Restless Development has been described by Accountable Now as "A Flagship for Dynamic Accountability", our commitment to transparency and feedback loops continues:

All policies are on the website – including minutes from all board meetings. Our Global Salary Scale, delivers pay parity across the agency taking an anti-racist approach with a set of global roles shared across the entire agency.

Quarterly reports are shared across all staff members, and outputs from global leadership meetings are available for staff to engage with. Dynamic accountability runs through our approach to programme delivery and working with the Youth Collective by conducting annual surveys with Youth Collective members, and ensuring internal and external project evaluations are used to shape ongoing work.

Our global staff demographics. (@September 2022)

Total staff strength: 262

- 80% staff and volunteers under 35
- 46% of our staff were women
- 64% of our leadership roles were held by women
- 70% of our senior leadership were recruited internally
- 43% of our Directors and Leaders started with Restless Development as volunteers
Income increased by 8.2% due to an increase in unrestricted fundraising. We successfully conducted a series of school triathlons and events as a result of raising £1,230,000 after COVID-19 restrictions were lifted in 2021. Power up appeal requires £80,000 funds to be set aside to support Sierra Leone HUB as part of FCDO match grant for next 3 years. Hence, £80,000 amount has been kept separately under designated reserve which resulted in impact free reserve £48,000.

FOR EVERY £1 YOU GIVE, 80P IS SPENT DIRECTLY ON OUR WORK WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.
